A random variable is a function that associates a real number with every result of a random experiment.

We will use capital letters to refer to the above mentioned variables, while the small letters will serve to rever to the concrete values of the above mentioned variables.

Discrete random variables are those whice can

Discrete random variables

only take integer results.

The result of throwing a dice, the number of Continuous random variables

Continuous random variables can take any real value within its interval.

the people that comes to an event...

The duration of a light bulb, the height or weight of a person, the temperature of a roo....